

IHE Master's Performance Report

Gardner-Webb University

2006 - 2007

Overview of Master's Program

Gardner-Webb University offered its first graduate degree in 1980, a master of arts in education. Since then, the graduate offerings have grown slowly and steadily. Today GWU has a Graduate School which offers M.A., M.S./Ed.S., and Ed.D degrees, a graduate School of Divinity which offers M.Div. and D.Min. degrees, and a graduate School of Business which offers M.B.A., I.M.B.A., and M.Acc. degrees. Within the Graduate School, licensure programs include a Master of Arts in Education in elementary education, middle grades education, English education, and school administration; a Master of Arts in school counseling; and an Ed.D. in educational leadership. All of these programs are part-time programs, designed for working professionals and range from 30 to 63 semester hours. All master's classes, with the exception of internship and practicum classes, meet once a week for three hours and each has a specific curriculum rotation, which facilitates program planning and registration. School administration candidates complete their degrees by successfully performing in year-long internships and passing comprehensive examinations; elementary and middle grades candidates present their capstone research projects; English education candidates present their professional portfolios; school counseling candidates complete practicum and internship experiences ; doctoral candidates defend their dissertations. The School of Education also offers School Administration licensure for those who already have a master's degree and North Carolina licensure. All courses for the add-on School Administration license are delivered online, which accounts for the explosive growth of this offering. Some school systems assist graduate students who are teachers or assistant principals with payment of tuition and fees. Financial assistance in the form of graduate assistantships is also available to Boiling Springs campus graduate students.

Special Features of Master's Program

The Master's programs at Gardner-Webb University have two unique features – their format and their philosophy. The master's programs are all part-time programs, designed to encourage full-time career people to return to school for graduate education. Classes are offered once a week for three hours and each program has a specific curriculum rotation. Graduate students take one class during the fall semester, one class during the spring semester, and two classes during the summer (one each five-week session), for a total of 12 semester hours per year. Programs contain 30-36 semester hours and normally take 2 ½ years to complete. Because of this format, however, and the fact that there are different sites that offer the same program with different course rotations, students frequently take more than one class per semester, driving to various sites, and completing their programs in less time. Gardner-Webb University has its main campus in Boiling Springs, a branch campus in Statesville, and has permanently leased space in Charlotte and Winston-Salem. Philosophically, Gardner-Webb University is committed to providing quality education at sites other than the four sites previously mentioned. In addition to the four sites mentioned above, during 2006-2007 we offered our School Administration program in Burke County (Valdese) and in Davidson County. In order to determine if a cluster will begin at a new site, dialog occurs between the GWU Graduate School and school system administrators. Surveys are then conducted by GWU to determine locations of interest and curriculum areas of interest and, if at least 20 persons commit to enrolling in a graduate program, the University will be responsive and take a program where there is interest. Although we offer programs in a variety of locations, the quality remains high because the courses are primarily staffed by full-time faculty, thus ensuring cohesiveness and continuity of philosophy. All sites are supported by the university technology resources and are driven by processes that are “consumer-friendly,” such as web registration and on-line text ordering. We are constantly seeking new ways to make graduate education more attractive and available.
